

FRYE'S ATTACK ON CLEVELAND.

Senator Frye in the open Senate has made an attack on Cleveland's Free Trade Message that strikes some terrible body blows.

Frye called up the motion to refer to the Committee on Finance the President's annual message and proceeded to discuss the message, in which he said the President had clearly thrown down the gauntlet of free trade. There was an attempt he admitted, at disguise, but so feeble that it ought not deceive any one; that the message had been received with unbounded joy in Great Britain. The British press had at once proceeded to self-congratulations and to strip off mercilessly the President's disguise. These congratulations, he said, would have been continued if a voice of warning had not been heard. The warning was that such English expressions had better be curbed, or the full fruition of English hopes never would be enjoyed. He quotes from the Pall Mall Gazette to that effect, and said that immediately there had been a transformation. The Free-Trade papers of Great Britain dropped at once the self-congratulations, and had proceeded to congratulate the United States and to prophesy unbounded prosperity for this country. Great Britain had seemed suddenly to recognize the fact that this country was her daughter, and to evince to her friendship and affection. He declared emphatically that England had never, in one single instance, evinced any sympathy for this country, and that she never permitted an opportunity to injure this country to pass unimproved. He declared that the counsel, advice and friendship of Great Britain to any nation in commercial matters had invariably and inevitably resulted in injury to the nation which accepted it. Ireland was an instance of that, and yet, said he, "Great Britain hoped that the Democratic party expected that the Irish votes next Fall would be given for Cleveland as the Democratic candidate for the Presidency. One of the leading free trade speakers in England had declared years ago that the greatest triumph of Great Britain would be the subjugation of the United States, and in the promise of the President's message they could see that subjugation nigh at hand."
